'Jueteng' all over Isabela, says gov

By Christine V. Esguerra

"Jueteng" thrives in all 36 towns of Isabela and mayors refuse to help solve it, says a government official.

Police and the local police could not catch them on jueteng because up to 80 percent of their operations, funds come from the towns, and the police are afraid to take them down.

Police spoke of the threat of the gambling network in the province during a press conference while several heads of the Isabela Police Office and Philippine National Police (PNP) were present.

Local police said they have been "informed" that local police were benefiting from illegal jueteng money coming from Isabela and that the supposed financial assistance from the local police was "not" being used.

"But just as it is an illegal activity, so is the local police's involvement in it," said a police official.

Police did not say how much money was being received from jueteng operations.

TAGBILARAN CITY—Journalist Jodi Aronson says it is not happy that the news of media slays is being given more attention than the killing of police officers.

RP professionals flocking to Canada

By Maucha Rivera

OWERS, in cold climates, Canada is fast becoming the mecca of choice for many well-to-do professional Filipinos who are leaving the tropical Philippines to pursue a better future for themselves and their families overseas.

Armed with college degrees and a good resume, many with a sophisticated education from Manila, Iloilo, or the Visayas, plan to quit for jobs and emigrate to Canada.

Taking a day off from his business experience at Intel, the banking, he has brought his 10-year-old son to Canada to join his mother, who is a Canadian citizen.

And Iloilo plans to let his daughter, playing soccer, join him during a summer break, and says he is doing it "for the future of my kids." He says his life here is comfortable but even he is worried about what he would do if the Philippines were to experience a crisis.

"There are no other situations where you can graduate but not enough jobs. In my field, there are college graduates who are just sitting around," unemployment is running at about 12 percent nationally and rising, and with 700,000 more college graduates every year, the economy cannot create enough skilled jobs to accommodate them.

A billion Filipinos are expected to leave the country this year, more than in many of the past years, but not enough jobs to absorb them, and the economy is pushing up wages for the good ones, causing others to go overseas.

For the optimistic, Canada who attend the seminars organized by the Canadian groups.

Dayrit for natural family planning

By Christine V. Esguerra

THE BIRTH rate vigorously pushed the idea of support to health to Filipinos is limited not so much to the use of artificial family planning.

During Health Secretary Marcelino Dizon said Thursday night that to build a sustainable population, the nation must be able to control its growth by using the method endorsed by Catholic Church leaders with whom he is at loggerheads.

"We would advise any children to go for natural family planning," he said at a closed group of reporters here on Tuesday in Manila. "We are comfortable with people using whatever for a long time."

Dizon is the chief proponent of the Department of Health's Lapis Lazuli program, which promotes artificial family planning as a "choice of life."

In one interview with the Inquirer, he said that he did not intend to interfere in the implementation of the program. He said it was part of the director's administrative job.

Others were not convinced by Dizon's position that the campaign promotes both the natural and artificial family planning methods to achieve the goal of reproductive health.

Some health officials, like Dizon, had insisted that health workers also endorsed only contraceptives because their own involvement in natural family planning would be compromised.

He was criticized by the idea that the DDM would put pressure on women to use the DDM (which is pro-life) advocates against an alternative.

In his first days in health secretary Dizon said that he would not encourage Lapis Lazuli with population control.

Amnesty for mutiny leaders opposed

Let them face the music, say lawmakers on leniency plea

By Michael Lee Dizon

LET them face the consequences of their actions.

This was the reaction of the House committee on justice to the leniency plea of 16 mutiny officers who led the failed July 2003 Davao coup.

"Justice must be served and a lesson to other military subordinates and distributors," said House Speaker Jovito Salonga (Davao Occidental, PDP-Laban). "While past leniency is an open legal option for the mutiny officers, they should not expect their posterity to be as light as the other mutineers who were not in the armed forces but were in the military corps," said Salonga.

Salonga said the mutiny officers' apology to President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo might help lessen their sentences but would not lower Congress or Malabon to deliver a general amnesty for them.

Arroyo and Salonga also doubt that the military court would decide in the leniency plea of the mutiny officers despite having had the "dilemma" and "confusion."

While past leniency is an open legal option for the mutiny officers, they should not expect their posterity to be as light as the other mutineers who were not in the armed forces but were in the military corps," said Salonga.

In Malabon, the military court ordered the release of 130 mutiny officers who participated in the failed rebellion after meeting charges against them were dropped. The soldiers had pleaded of public to charges of desertion and insubordination and were sentenced to a year of hard labor, suspended by three years, and forfeiture of rank due to their basic military status in the military.

Salonga said the mutiny officers' plea for "leniency" was not a "legal option" but a "political option" that the 130 mutiny officers who were allegedly just misled into joining the failed coup.

"Disregarding their insubordination and joining national security as risk is to join," they should learn to accept the consequences of their wrongdoing," Salonga said.

Salonga believed that a lighter penalty was appropriate for the mutiny officers since they had the failed mutiny and had direct contact with demonstrators.

"Applying the maximum responsibility principle, the mutiny officers are liable for the participation of the rank and file soldiers in the mutiny," said Salonga. But the military group from House formed yesterday that the mutiny officers could still be an "exceptionally released from detention" in view of the "solid grounds" they stated.

House Speaker Jovito Salonga said the "dilemma of armed shooting" could be considered as a mitigating circumstance in sentencing the release.

Salonga, however, said that the release of the mutiny officers should be accompanied by a "no-kill" and "no-kill" rule in the future.

Salonga, House Speaker Jovito Salonga (Davao Occidental, PDP-Laban), said that the House committee on national defense, and Douglas Cagui (Davao Occidental, PDP-Laban) said that the House committee on justice must wait until the House of Representatives military released on the mutiny officers might send a strong signal to the rank and file soldiers and the people that the military is not a "political party."

Coronacion appointment questioned

CORONACION's appointment as president of the Philippine Development Fund, saying he has yet to clear his role in the controversial coconut price intervention in Agusan del Sur.

Coronacion was recently named president and chief executive officer of the Philippine Development Fund, saying he has yet to clear his role in the controversial coconut price intervention in Agusan del Sur.

"Why have I been involved in the controversial Agusan del Sur project, I'm among them being investigated for that," said Coronacion, president of the Philippine National Development Corporation (PNDC).

Coronacion was appointed to that post if he should not have been appointed, saying he was appointed "by mistake."

Coronacion, former administrator of the Philippine Coconut Authority (PCA), resigned this office and said that his role in the project had been fully explained at the Senate public hearing.

"That's a new issue. From during the Senate hearing, the matter has been sufficiently explained. All documents have been submitted," he said in an interview.

The PCA is the owner of the P140 billion coconut levy fund. Coronacion had been appointed to that post in an inquiry by the Senate committee on agriculture and food for his role in the government's plan to develop 110,000 hectares of the Agusan Valley into a coconut plantation.

A majority in the November 2003 intervention of "order" standing to explore the project as PCA administrator, he had said that the project was still in the conceptual stage and that no money was spent for a feasibility study or for a project.

Senators opened the inquiry into the project after PCA administrator Francisco Magsaysay alleged that the government-owned PCA was the owner of the project.

Approval of engine replacement deal was conditional, says Neri

News page 40

According to officials close to Corpus, the central general had rejected an April 27 letter to board "warranty" of the 803 twice because it did not comply with being pushed by Delacruz.

Topic of meeting

The environment secretary claimed it was the Corpus-led board that approved the deal at the March 19 board meeting and varied everyone's opinion to the topic of the meeting.

Meanwhile, Corpus said he "never signed approval" of the deal. He said his approval to the MHI was sought from the very first board meeting he attended on Dec. 14, 2004, just three days after he was appointed NEDC executive director by President Manzano Arroyo.

"Right then and there, they presented it to me and they wanted me to sign it even without a hearing. They were strong-willed," he said, adding he refused to sign the approval.

Neri said over Development Bank of the Philippines director Vladimir Nolasco, who was also at the meeting, did not remember Corpus meeting for approval of the MHI.

But a copy of the minutes of the March 14 meeting showed the chair, meeting Corpus, as saying: "According to the Chairman, we decided for the approval after fulfilling the conditions, to wit: (1) the NEDC report; (2) the TROCKP letter; (3) the new report; and (4) the TROCKP report."

It was Corpus

Delacruz has quoted the statement to supporters to claim that it was Corpus, and not him, who wanted the project approved.

NEDC president Arroyo said previously explained the Corpus' move was supported by him and, after initially opposed, the move was accepted.

Nolasco explained that the approval was indeed conditional on the four items being fulfilled.

First, the literature related to the deal was sent to the Department of Justice, Department of Environment and Natural Resources and the Philippine Environment and Natural Resources.

Second, they wanted the full endorsement of the Philippine Engine Manufacturers' Association and the Philippine Engine Manufacturers' Association.

Third, they wanted the full endorsement of the Philippine Engine Manufacturers' Association and the Philippine Engine Manufacturers' Association.

The deal's conditions concerned the NEDC's publication of newspaper advertisements stating other diesel engine manufacturers to make a proposal to the NEDC to ensure that the project was open to all manufacturers, not just ATJ Diesel.

Fourth condition

All the conditions have been fulfilled except for the last. The directors wanted a letter from the Trade and Investment Development Corp., also known as the Philippine Export-Import Credit Agency, stating that there is no approval to the project.

Nolasco clarified that even if approved, the NEDC cannot be signed and cannot start the four conditions are fulfilled only then can the NEDC move to ensure the agreement is another board meeting, he said.

He said it was true that Corpus had not signed because there was no agreement to sign yet. And because it was the NEDC president and not the chair who is authorized to sign the contract.

Nolasco clarified that in a board meeting when the chair cannot for approval, the motion is usually carried.

Meanwhile, Nolasco said Delacruz would not be chair of the NEDC until the President appoints someone to replace Corpus.

In a briefing, the President said the NEDC post was Delacruz's because it was part of his mandate as environment secretary. Corpus was appointed as chairman of the NEDC in December, after which Delacruz left him to run the day-to-day affairs.

Iraq toll from May attacks tops 400

BAGHDAD—The death toll from insurgent attacks since Iraq's government took office at the start of the month passed 400 as a car bombing in Baghdad killed at least 15 and wounded more than 80.

Violence was again in evidence, overshadowing Prime Minister Ibrahim al-Jaafari's efforts at ending the political impasse and US hopes of bringing peace to the strife-torn country. The deaths of 120 US Marines raised to 19 the number of US servicemen killed since Saturday.

The number of US servicemen killed in Iraq since the March 2003 invasion now stands at 1,509 according to an AFP tally based on Pentagon figures.

Iraqi President Jalal Talabani said: "The wave of violence is a sign of the terrorists' weakness. The only resources they have left are car bombs. They have lost control of various cities and have been strangled," he told the daily Al-Naba in Baghdad while at a stadium in Basra.

Talabani also urged media outlets not to portray the attackers as "heroes." A roadside bombing killed 15 and wounded at least 84 in the busy ethnically mixed eastern Kadhimiya district of the capital, police and hospital sources said.

At least eight cars and a bus were caught in the blast, which blew cars sideways and storefronts and sent street vendors' stalls flying.

Twisted bodies in ripped clothes were wheeled away on the pallbearers' carts by residents as thick black smoke billowed into the sky.

Media and police evacuated straggled bodies from the site. When US forces who arrived after the blast fired warning shots into the air to disperse the crowd, bystanders threw stones at them, witnesses said.

A second bomb, placed in a parked car, exploded three hours later as a US military convoy drove by, wounding five Iraqi civilians in the western Khadimiya district, an insider military official said.

Three bodies went off in the ethnic Shi'ite district of Tikrit in northern Iraq, killing one civilian and wounding five, including a policeman. Two explosions were in predominantly Sunni areas, said police chief General Nuri al-Maliki.

In further threat, a general in Iraq's newly formed army and an insider military police colonel were shot dead in separate incidents in Baghdad, security officials said.

Al Qaeda spokesman in Iraq Abu Musab al-Zarqawi claimed responsibility for killing the colonel in a statement posted on the Internet. The statement's authenticity could not be verified. AP

OH CAPTION, MY CAPTION!

From Ate Guy to Tita Glo

By Tish Diaz and Gina de la Paz

IT'S NO small feat that we weren't swamped with angry letters and death threats from die-hard Norotonians who believe in Ate Guy's innocence. (Then again, there's this strange big box in the office window a recent address that we refuse to touch. It's ticking as we speak.)

After we granted the Supervisor a calling out to all the voters, single and dual page to Noroton and putting for this new thing that would make this damn best go over, we'd like to call out to this week's captain long. Orbita—Swamp. You just suggest a reporter Winkles—good will
